For essay subjects and longer answer questions – suggested question titles for practice:	The key command words which will be included in the paper will be 'explain' worth 4 marks and 'assess' worth 12 marks. 'Explain' questions will require student to make and develop at least two points or they may need to demonstrate one of the skills listed at the end of each specification. 'Assess' questions require the students to order their points so that the most significant point or factor is included first and then each subsequent paragraph will provide an additional point or a counter argument or alternative point if applicable. A typical 'assess' question may be to 'assess the relative importance of hard power in maintaining/achieving superpower status'. In a question like this, a decision should be made as to whether it

	plays a large role or a smaller role and whether other factors may be equally or more important than hard power. A brief plan should be written before the essay is started so that the essay flows well and has a clear set of arguments and that the importance of hard power has been clearly assessed. Ongoing assessment should take place which means that only a brief conclusion is required to summarise the key findings. E.g. It can be concluded that hard power continues to play a large role but increasingly, the use of soft and smart power is being used to exert global influence’. Students have had the opportunity to practice a number of these style of essays and they use the same generic mark scheme for each which can also be found on OneDrive.
